The story is about a pilot who crashes in the Sahara Desert. A thousand miles from any habitation, while attempting to fix his plane, he meets a strangely dressed little boy who seems to have come from nowhere, and who demands that he draws a sheep. As the pilot is uncertain about the boy, he obeys and attempts to draw a sheep.

Gradually the Little Prince reveals his story. He comes from a small asteroid, where he lives alone until a rose grows there. But the rose is demanding, and he is confused by his feelings about her. Eventually he decides to leave, and journey to other planets in search of knowledge. After meeting many confusing adults, he eventually lands on Earth, where he befriends a snake and a fox. The fox helps him to understand the rose, and the snake offers to help him return to his planet -- but at a price. Can he really go back to his planet? Please read the book and explore his journey.

This beautiful children's classic really isn't for kids, although it looks like a picture book.

With its thoughtfulness and creativity for childhood, it appeals more to teens and adults. Is it suitable for secondary students? Definitely! Teenagers can gradually understand its kindly philosophy one of their most vivid moments in childhood.
